

John Drissen architects

design | space | people | environment

"I am convinced that buildings and the quality of the built environment is the result of a continuous design and construction process in which the various participants openly exchange their specialist knowledge and creative ideas. My expertise is based upon a solid foundation of budget, process, program control, and an intensive dialogue with the client, the local authorities, consultants, contractors and end users".

John Drissen's architecture strives for a balance between analysis, context, innovation and construction to become a natural part of its surroundings. The beauty of a building and the comfort of their spaces is the result of unique architectural solutions for each individual project. The basic principles remain flexibility, sensibility and sustainability at social, economic and environmental level.

Our portfolio containing projects in the Netherlands and Colombia. He has led the realization of his own projects and projects for other architecture offices, ranging from buildings for public and commercial use to luxury and social housing projects.
